I think the Family Group Conferencing would be a good approach to use particularly for Self-neglect cases to ensure better partnership working with family and other professionals so we can get better outcomes. Also regarding Motivational interviewing, I think working in Adults it would be helpful to use this approach particularly when we are working with Difficult families, however this training is not offered in our local authority.

Q12_6_TEXT - Additional comments or observations

Additional comments or observations

I'm not clear what you mean. My understanding of strengths based practice is to see what is working for the person and what support they have in place, and how I can build on and add to that if needed, including by using community resources. I'm not clear if this is the definition you are using.

Some Directorates, but not across the board

Additional comments or observations

Whilst we use a strength based assessment and have community broker we have not been robust enough in getting people to the community resources that would help people maximise their potential

lots of training and embedding into practice

Unable to comment as dont directly work in this area

There is regular training put on by the Council for Strengths based assessments, however to embed this approach more there needs to be space for practice discussion of case study to support all practitioners by way of example.

such models and theories are not shared with none qualified workers

It does depend on the worker, but we have been using a strengthened based approach for many years (which is why I have stated there has been little change in the last 5 years.

I did not have any understanding.

We may not use commonly recognised tools, but the persons strengths form the basis of our interventions as OTs.

some staff are set in their ways , the theory of enablement needs to be emphasised

However this is less so if we receive a compliant

All practitioners have received formal training in this area.

I dont think its been described and I dont think the call for action is clear

Strengths-based practice is a new term within my local authority

There is a clear understanding in my team but not in the local authority as a whole some professions like OT understand but it does not appear that other social care staff has as much of an understanding or if they do we do not have the resources available to fully embrace a strengths based approach and provision of brokered care is always often the only option disussed not consistently across workers

Q13 - 11. My understanding of strengths-based practice is similar to that communicated by my local authority area.

Q14_6_TEXT - Additional comments or observations

Additional comments or observations

proper assessment at 1st contact made would cover lots issues rather start with conversation 1,2,3 to find a solution that would depend on finances

I think that in this authority it can be used as an opportunity to minimise needs. I also think that it is more relevant to certain types of care needs but that it fails if there aren't the statutory or third sector services to help support people e.g. persons who have autism have no specific services in Herefordshire so do not have the opportunity to lean on their strengths

I am based in an admin role

Coming away from the way we previously worked, working with Strengths based approach does require different mindset, where we see ourselves as facilitators and collaborators, supporting family and person to arrive at their solutions rather than as previously being service led and providing services.

In conjunction with other approaches as well - not just as a 'buzz word'

I think there is a fundamental ethical conflict between gatekeeping resources and strengths-based practice (as I see it described). Please don't think I believe we should empower people by focusing helping them draw on their strengths. But I am very cynical about the model.

Listening skills is important, ongoing communication-open channels of communication are vital with people and other professionals which may or may not be involved at the point of contact.

It always has been as I was trained in person centred care

But all partners need to be signed up

This is more appropriate for new assessments but less when reviewing long standing service users are likely to be declining

100% but what does this mean in our area, how far can we push this and how can we still ensure equity in the delivery of services

I have not heard of the term strength based practice it was interesting 'you' described person centred practice as near synonymous, on a previous page. I also worry about the level of the level of philanthropy behind the motivations for the care act and strengths based. The extent to which the economic environment influenced them. Not that the two are synonymous nor strengths based need/should be interpreted in this way.

If resource permits, staffing shortages have had a negative impact only if it has resources available otherwise it just a paper exercise

Q15 - 13. I understand my roles and responsibilities with respect to delivering strengths-based practice.

Q16_5_TEXT - Additional comments or observations

Additional comments or observations

Its our role

We have pre covid had a programme to implement which was very successful, however we need to be able to revisit and relaunch this post covid to strengthen and manage demand and pressures post covid

Additional comments or observations

services have never been, one coherent service

Also commissioning has a good grasp of this area of work.

I am not directly involved so an only comment on what I hear

To be honest I am unable to answer this question as I do not know the answer

Although not equitably practised across all Directorates

I think people believe they are being strengths-based but not to the extent that i understand the approach.

They are implemented but I am not aware that they have been reviewed holistically

Further training is required

I am based in an admin role

As I have said previously, our Local Authority has been a strong advocate for the training, but we need to embed more on a teams level.

There has been very haphazard and ineffective implementation.

I am unable to comment

The concept is there but the need to get people placed quickly can over ride this- especially from hospital.

Planning started but not followed through by Head of Service

Unaware of any introduction or implementation

no idea

Again SBP seems less significance if we receive a complaint

Our Practice Guidance promotes and supports strengths based practice but it has not reached optimal realisation in operational teams. We have work to do on systems, organisational structures and cultures.

I am not aware of any

Introduced the concept

Don't know anything about it.

i'm fairly new to the authority and had strengths based training in a different authority.

Not on the agenda or discussed in relation to OT

Additional comments or observations

I am unsure what stage this LA is at Major issues with recording. Data gaps. No identifiable benefit seen within the data compared to previous social care models

Needs to be inbedded with providers, commissioning, Procurement, Support Plans

Q19_6_TEXT - Additional comments or observations

Additional comments or observations

it is not considered at the moment

our modelling is with our workforce as well as our clients

I work in an admin role

Additional comments or observations

Our assessments are reviewed by management to ensure they are Strengths based.

Discussions based on clients that we work with is imperative. Regular supervisiins, courses that update my practice

I work in DoLS so this is very strength based but I do not believe that the route that is followed to place people in nursing and residential care is particularly strength based in many cases, especially when we have pressure on hospital beds, discharge to assess and a brokerage system that is about availability of places.

This is the expectation however clear messages of expectations not consistently communicated

OTs work in a strengths based way anyway

As per comment above some of our structures and processes do not support the application of it in practice.

No idea

This is a Care Act requirement aligned with OT practice

Not on the agenda for OT

I have always practiced with this approach we are currently in the worst situation in history trying to work in an environment where there is a national shortage of staff and social care beyond residential care has been overlooked. We have spent our time trying to ensure that people receive care it depends on the context, in my face to face work with Service Users I would take a strengths based approach, but in requests such as funding requests a deficit approach is needed and you need to focus on risk and inability or won't get funding.

Additional comments or observations

Need more front line workers

I just do it regardless.

Additional comments or observations

There is still a degree of other directorates seeing the role of ASC to 'take care of' individuals regardless of assessed needs

I work in an admin role

Our supervisors are committed to ensure the assessments are Strengths based, but I think the team will save time if there is practice discussions to show examples of what a good Strengths Based assessment looks like and what is not.

It's a very risk averse authority that does not always respect people's choices (e.g. they raise a safeguarding if someone declines a piece of OT equipment such as a stair lift and chooses to do upstairs living because they want to be in their bedroom and near to the bathroom upstairs).

Seems to only be some Social Care staff members that follow strengths based practice - other teams are not taught to work in this way (I have been on other teams and this was never once discussed)

When dealing with complaints or anxieties from other services

The Council as a whole is committed to enabling its clients to use their strengths and own means to recover from illness, injury and any number of other needs.

lack of resources

unfortunately, the strengths agenda can be polluted by the austerity agenda

There is too much emphasis on performance and number crunching, staff are not allowed time to work in a strengths based way. The commissioning of services needs a complete overhaul, there is no scope for reablement unless the person is being discharged from hospital. There is no opportunity to explore the local community and support available. Some senior managers appear to think that 3 Cs is SBP rather than a tool to support it

I think it comes a lot easier to the local authority than to some of our health partners we work closely with there are inconsistencies, in ways of working and styles/ different managers want different things

Q33_7_TEXT - Additional comments or observations

Additional comments or observations

Sometimes places a higher degree of stress on carers to continue providing their support at what may be the cost to their own health

If we implemented this fully then I think it would have an impact

Additional comments or observations

Strengths based practice has a positive impact on people with care and support needs. However this often conflicts with the support of carers and their families as this can have a negative impact on them. As they feel the person is often left more at risk and 'looser' less traditional services are used.

I work in an admin role

Individuals and families feel more involved and they are the experts on their lives, this fosters more trust as the belief they are the experts give them greater confidence and therefore better collaboration.

people traditionally want services and this is a difficult culture to change

See my previous comments re gatekeeping.

It can sometimes add more pressure to the family

Working in a manner that is sensitive in some situations. Building trust, being open, honest and transparent.

as long as it not just lip service

From my experience.

This is hard to answer as I agreed with SBP, and for many this is a positive and enabling approach . OT practice aligns with SBP and promoting independence , positive risk taking etc.. however there are many people who are very used to things being done for them and remain in this mind set and when a SBP is used they do not feel they are being provided with the service they expect. I cannot say the way we work in OT has changed much other than the recordings being on different forms.

I believe this approach can produce good results and have a positive impact on all involved but not for everyone and more time is needed to practice in this way

My role is to enable people to regain their independence following illness or injury by way of assistive equipment, adaptations, rehab, physio, and on-going therapy. Part of this requires that the person is pro-active in taking part in therapy, using the strengths they have built up over a long time to overcome adversity and improve their wellbeing.

I have worked with clients and families using strengths based practice which has allowed clients to focus on the strengths and abilities and allowed them to tap into resources around them which has had a positive impact on their lives

I am not sure of what strengths-based practice is

Although some people may take more risks or be more hesitant to activate services which generates a fear in the work force of people not getting what they need at an appropriate and safe level.

We have not been advised about this

I wonder if 3 Conversations looks deeply enough into supporting people it certainly can - the ethos is sound (imho) without feedback from individuals who have experienced we can not say- there is poor communication regarding complaint outcomes and no surveys to individuals who have received a service.

Additional comments or observations

I think strengths based working can support positive outcomes, promote independence and less reliance on services. Families can sometimes share that they feel this is that 'no-one is helping them' and that they feel they have to do it themselves. Particularly within Transitions work where many of the young people have had a Childrens Social Worker who may not have taken this approach families can feel 'less supported' by this approach.

As an OT we are trained and work in a strengths based way. It is our usual approach to working with people, however, the resources available in the community are poor and there is a lack of information for us to share.
